Belgrade

BELGRADE is the capitol of the Republic of Serbia and with a population of just over 1.700.000 citizens, is the third largest city in Southeastern Europe after Istanbul and Athens. Belgrade is the city of young people. More than 40% of its citizens are between 15 and 44 years of age.

All citizens of Belgrade love to talk about the spirit of the city. Very opened, friendly and always ready for fun, many Belgraders will claim to be true hedonists – and many of them really are - knowing all there is to know about good food, wine and music. They like being in motion and therefore the streets, walkways, cafes and restaurants are always filled with people. Belgrade is growing every day into a true metropolis. More than a quarter of the population of Serbia lives there today! It is becoming ever more beautiful, orderly and clean, but also increasingly frantic, since life in Belgrade has been ever faster as it is in all big cities. The makeup of the population of Belgrade often changed during the past centuries. People from all over the Balkans and central Europe moved to it, and many departed under their own volition or under duress, but those that remained became Belgraders within a generation and seldom abandoned it without pressing need. More importantly, Belgraders like everyone and they are well known for their hospitality and friendship.

History

Belgrade is a city with a tumultuous, but also frequently tragic past, primarily due to its unique position at the confluence of the Sava and Danube rivers, on the border between the East and the West. Belgrade has been permanently settled since the mid Neolithic period, the time when its area played host to the Vinča culture, more than 4,000 years B.C.E. The Greeks came later, followed by the Romans who pushed the Celts across the Sava and Danube rivers. They built a mighty fort on the Kalemegdan ridge with a city next to it. From the Celtic dun and the Roman castrum the city grew into a significant border fortification of the Huns and then the Byzantine emperors Anastasius and Justinianus, the Avars, Bulgars, Ugars, Serbs, Turks and Austrians, until it became the capital of modern Serbia during the 19th century. The name Belgrade was first recorded in 878. Belgrade had around ten names in the past and each one almost always spoke of its beauty and whiteness. It was called Belgrad, Bello Grado, Alba Urbs, Alba Graeca, Griechisch Weissenburg, Nándor Fehérvár, Nándor Alba, Castelbianco. All these names are translations of the Slavic word Beograd. This city, living through and surviving numerous wars and destruction during the centuries, is one of the oldest cities in Europe.

It became the capital of the Serb medieval state during the reign of King Dragutin Nemanjić. During the reign of Prince Miloš, from 1841 onwards, Belgrade became the permanent capital of the Principality, and thereafter the Kingdom of Serbia. Following World War I, in 1918, it became the capital of the Kingdom of Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, and thereafter of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia. After World War II it regained its position as the capital of the country of Yugoslavia that changed its name a number of times, only to become, once again and finally, the capital of Serbia. Belgrade gradually grew from an oriental town into a modern mid-European city during the 19th century when the first electric light was switched on in Belgrade, the first train took off towards Niš from the Belgrade railway station, the first cobbled road in Belgrade, the first horse-drawn tram, water pipelines were installed in several streets in the city centre and also the first telephone rang, while the first cinema projection was held in 1896, a mere six months after the first projection by the Lumičre brothers in Paris. Belgrade had a population of 50,000 citizens and grew into a true European capital during the early 20th century. Unfortunately, it was bombed and demolished during World War I, and the same occurred in World War II, when the Nazi Luftwaffe turned a large part of the city to dust and rubble in 1941. The cycle was repeated in 1944 when the allied Anglo-American air force repeatedly demolished large parts of the city in addition to the few remaining German military facilities. Unfortunately, another round of destruction occurred in 1999 when the NATO Alliance air force destroyed several tens of residential buildings, administrative, communal and production facilities, communications, etc. All of these bombings left behind a large number of human victims, dead, buried in the rubble or wounded.

LOCATION

Belgrade is located in Southeastern Europe, on the Balkan Peninsula, at the crossroads of Eastern and Western Europe. The city lies upon the Danube River, the aquatic route connecting the countries of Western and Middle Europe to the countries of the Southeastern and Eastern Europe. Its harbor visits by ships from the Black Sea, and with the deployment of the Rhine-Main-Danube channel it found itself at the center of the most important aquatic route in Europe: Northern Sea – Atlantic – Black Sea. Due to its position it was rightfully named “Gates of the Balkans” and the “Doors of Middle Europe”. The coordinates of Belgrade mark in the center of the city (in Knez Mihailova Street): 44°49'14" of geographic latitude north, 20°27'44" of geographic longitude east and 116.75 m above sea level. The area around Belgrade consists of two different environments: the Pannonian plain to the north and Šumadija to the south. The Kosmaj (628 m) and Avala (511 m) mountains are near Belgrade. The length of riverbanks is 200 km, with 16 river islands, the largest being Ada Ciganlija and the Great War Island.

CLIMATE

The climate in Belgrade is moderate continental, with four seasons. Autumn lasts longer than spring, with longer sunny and warm periods. The winters are not particularly harsh. There are 21 days on average with temperatures below zero degrees centigrade during the winter. January is the coldest month, with average temperatures of 0.4 °C. Springs are brief and rainy, with summer arriving suddenly. The hottest months are July (21.7 °C) and August (21.3 °C). Belgrade and its surroundings experience an average of 684 mm of rainfall annually, and umbrellas are mostly in use during May and June. Sunlight is most plentiful in July and August with around 10 hours per day, while December and January are known to be the cloudiest. Snow is present in Belgrade for an average of 27 days per year.

LANGUAGE

The official language of Serbia is Serbian, member of the group of South Slavic languages. The Cyrillic script is in official use, while the Latin script is also widely used, since both are taught in schools. The Cyrillic of Serbian has 30 letters – one letter per each phoneme, making it unique among scripts. The language and scripts of national minorities are in official use in areas with minority populations. Foreigners are recommended to use English for communication, while German, French and Russian are present to a lesser extent.
